RAISE THE STAKES

Number 24

The Planet Drum Review

EDITORIAL: This is a directory of more than 200 contact individuals, groups and publications that consider themselves to be bioregionally oriented. It can be used to find others in your area, or learn how they view their bioregions. It can also serve as a resource of groups and people to write to or visit in pursuit of information or experiences.

This directory was compiled from a "Bioregional Questionnaire" with questions about geography, indicator species, main interests, and other subjects. They were sent to everyone on our mailing lists and those who Planet Drummers came in contact within the last year and seemed appropriate. Because of late responses and other factors, the directory is still not representative of all bioregionalists. We are planning to update original listings in the "Circles of Correspondence" section of up and coming issues of Raise the Stakes and the Planet Drum Pulse. The complete updated directory will be kept on a computer database called "File Maker" and copies will be made available for sale. Give us a call if you wish to receive a questionnaire, update your original entry or purchase the computer disk.

Bioregionalism is devoted to three life-place goals: restoring and maintaining natural systems, finding sustainable ways to satisfy basic human needs, and supporting the work of reinhabitation. Specific bioregions have been studied, explored and defined by the people who live within them. Every group, person or publication that submitted a completed questionnaire has been included in this directory. There is a great variety of ideas about bioregionalism and perceptions of bioregions.

In describing themselves, groups often declare different primary interests such as education, community, agriculture, energy, politics, and more. Some represented bioregions are very large and others are quite small. Some are clearly defined and others roughly generalized. The directory's designations of large areas from "Pacific Coast" to "Atlantic Coast" are drawn arbitrarily as a rough means of finding groups. Forgive the borderlines and keep in mind that the bioregional mapmaker Steven Holloway has said, "Every time you draw a line on a map somebody lives on the line." Boundaries of specific bioregions within these large areas were taken directly from designations by represented groups. It is interesting to observe that some of these include other bioregional areas or overlap each other. In the future we will attempt to update the centerfold map and print it in four colors.

The directory also includes some groups outside of North America. There are serious bioregional movements to date in some of these places, especially Australia and Europe. Please note that telephone numbers outside Canada and the U.S. begin with the appropriate country code in parentheses.

Shasta Bioregion

Green City activists are evolving a program of policies for city and town governments in the San Francisco Bay Area in the following areas of urban sustainability: renewable energy, recycling, urban wild habitat, urban planning, transportation, neighborhood empowerment, cooperatives, sustainable planning, and arts and communication. The goal of the GCP is to join urban areas with the natural systems of bioregions in which they are located. It maintains a Volunteer Network, carries out Workshop/Workdays, and produces Education+Action events for schools.

GREEN CITY REPORT

There is no better indicator of how well the Green City Project (GCP) is doing than to participate in a bulk-mailing party for the Green City Calendar. We are currently mailing 2,100 copies of the Bay Area's only urban sustainability resource guide of daily events, to individuals, service groups, politicians, media contacts, and ecology groups (1,900 more get distributed at coffee shops, markets, and outdoor stores). Less than two years ago our mailing list was no bigger than 600—that's a 250% increase in readership! The Calendar listings have also expanded to the point that in this past March/April '95 issue, there was no room left for any editorial copy.

And just when you may have thought that there couldn't possibly be any more than the astonishing number of 325 urban environmental groups in our Green City umbrella, Volunteer Network manager Maggie Weadick tracked down ten more groups for the Green City Volunteer Network...Still there is no Ecology Section in the Bay Area's largest daily paper (why the heck not?), so publicity for and general public awareness of the Volunteer Network is our greatest constant challenge. In addition to radio public service announcements and mostly alternative newspaper mentions, the Network's free over-the-phone volunteer referral service is going to be featured in a comprehensive new book on volunteer/community involvement opportunities "Time to Get Involved: How to Volunteer in the Bay Area."

Since taking over the GCP's Education + Action Program (E + A) at the end of October, Simon Hurd has developed curriculum and implemented classroom workshop/workdays on the subjects of Bay Area endangered species and habitat, recycling, native plant restoration, urban composting and gardening, water resource protection, and urban forestry. In the coming weeks he will work with schools on urban planning, alternative bicycle transportation, and native wildflower re-establishment. E + A is truly breaking new ground, combining environmental education with hands-on action, exciting kids and connecting teachers to a huge range of environmental educators and service projects. We have had an overwhelming response to this unique and effective program.

GCP's Earth Block/Ciudad Verde is returning in May to the West Coast's largest multicultural celebration, San Francisco's Mission District street festival Carnaval. This is our third year bringing urban sustainability groups with interactive, bilingual exhibits to 50,000 inner city folks who probably do not attend Earth Day events. We like the subversive approach, slipping hands-on environmental education into what is otherwise a giant celebration of the senses.

I will speak about the Green City Project and community-based efforts towards urban sustainability at an event on April 12th sponsored by Ohio State University's Department of City and Regional Planning, in Columbus, OH. Planet Drum members in nearby areas are encouraged to contact us for details and come learn about Green City and meet me in person.

Planet Drum PULSE

We worked ourselves into a frenzy as usual, but like most enthusiastic bioregionalists, Planet Drummers also took time out to enjoy recognizing and celebrating planetary holidays. The sunset on the winter solstice was no exception. Close to two dozen staffers, volunteers, and friendly associates brought their drums and gathered on San Francisco's Twin Peaks for a joyous welcoming of the coming six months of increasing daylight.

But rain was soon to follow. A five-week stormy, vast, gray wall of fog, clouds, and torrential rains shrouded much of the Shasta Bioregion. The rains resulted in the resurrection of Goldhaft Creek, a seasonal office basement watershed system named after Planet Drum's co-director and Water Web wonder Judy Goldhaft.

The office flood incited Green City dynamo Sabrina Merlo to orchestrate an office reorganization and "water management plan" for the massive amounts of information and resources that Planet Drum has collected over the past two decades. After volunteering more than fifty person hours, the staff managed to move everything to dry ground and create much more space. Thanks to Brian Lease for his carpentry help.

Thanks also to many other volunteers: Paul Sigler helped to edit this issue of Raise the Stakes; Ingrid Martin updated our mailing list; Rhonda Winter distributed the Green City Calendar; Montse Ruizvant assisted with Spanish translations; Ted Bluey worked on numerous design projects; Eric Noble provided emergency computer help; Dino Lucas was an office angel; and Carter Brooks helped with Raise the Stakes and also set up a database so that we could evaluate the Bioregional Association Project questionnaires. Planet Drum staffer Maggie Weadick entered and compiled questionnaire responses; see Peter Berg's article in the next Planet Drum Pulse for a summary of our findings.

You'd probably think that Peter and Judy would take a break after their six-week European speaking and presentation tour last fall, but immediately after their return, our seemingly tireless leaders headed up to Ashland, Oregon to speak and perform at the Fifth Bi-annual Watershed Management Council. Peter also spoke at Green Gulch Farm and gave a bioregional awareness and mapping workshop for San Francisco's Institute of Architecture's Ecological Design Program. I was there and can attest that it was a big hit.

Planet Drum is now in the process of planning and co-sponsoring another Shasta Bioregional Gathering (SBG). David Hormel and other dedicated bioregionalists are working hard to organize and co-sponsor SBG IV, which will be held in Sonoma County during September.

Planet Drum and our Green City Project would cease to exist without support from our faithful members and funders. Special thanks to the following organizations which have given grants since the last issue of the Pulse: The Acacia Group, The Foundation for Deep Ecology, The Fred Gellert Foundation, The Richard and Rhoda Goldman Fund, and the L.J. Skaggs and Mary C. Skaggs Foundation.

Lastly, we're extremely pleased to announce that we received everything we asked for on our last Planet Drum "Wish List." Kelly and Rosana Hart donated an answering machine; Chuck Gould surprised us with a much needed photocopier; and Hewlett Packard employee Steve Roseman astonished us with a donated laser printer. Thanks so much!

It's awkward to ask for more after receiving so much, but maybe we're on a roll so here it goes ... We urgently need a Macintosh II series or better to replace our outmoded computers ... We fantasize about having a Mac Quadra ... Can anyone help us out?
